FARM BUREAU NEWS

Oxford County, with the largest boys and girls 4H Club enrollment in the state is now putting out a club paper known as the "Oxford County 4H Club Bugle" which appears on the fifteenth of each month. The object of the paper is to bring to the club members and club leaders timely information on what is happening in club work throughout the county and to warn them of what should be done during the next month, so that they all will be able to keep up with their work. The paper also contains some information on earning for their various projects, such as gardening, sewing, etc. Every club member and club leader is on the mailing list, making a total of about six hundred copies sent out each month. It is expected that this paper will be very worth while in keeping interest and assisting the boys and girls in their projects. The big problem with boys and girls is to have them all come through and finish their projects turning in a story and records of the year's work at the time of the county club contest in the fall. Both Donald H. Ridley and Effie H. Braden, Extension Agents, feel that this paper will be a help toward keeping in closer contact with their 4H family.

New England Crop Report

Weather conditions this spring have been comparatively unfavorable to both farm work and plant growth. Rainfall has been adequate to heavy in practically all parts of New England. Temperatures have been lower than normal and cloudy days have been numerous.

Hay and grain crops in New England on June 1 showed a condition lower than last year and average. The condition of oats on June 1 for New England was 85.1% compared with 90.3% last year and 92.2% the ten year average. Barley is also backward. Hay prospects for New England are slightly below average and last year with a condition on June 1 of 91.1% compared with 93.9% a year ago and 92.2% the ten year average. Pastures are in comparatively good condition due to ample moisture supplies. The condition of pastures on June 1 was 89.3% compared with 90.8% last year and 89.6% the ten year average.

For the United States the outlook for winter wheat has improved from 486 million bushels expected on May 1 to 512 million bushels on June 1 compared with 552 million bushels harvested last year and 549 million bushels the five year average 1923-1927. The condition of spring wheat as 79.0% of normal is the lowest condition on record, excepting that of 1926 of 78.5%. The crop has been retarded by insufficient rainfall in the important states. The condition of rye and oats on June 1 is the lowest on record for that date for these crops. Hay prospects are materially lower than last year and average.

In nearly all sections of New England the apple bloom has been comparatively heavy and considerably better than a year ago. Maine is the outstanding exception with nearly all varieties, carrying a moderate bloom to light bloom. In the New England states outside of Maine both McIntosh and Baldwin blossomed heavily and practically all varieties carried a good bloom. The final production of apples, however, may not be as great as blossom prospects would indicate. Conditions have been very unfavorable to a satisfactory set of fruit. During much of the blossom period late in May and early in June cool cloudy and rainy weather prevailed. Bees had very few satisfactory days for working actively. Compared with a normal or 100% prospect the condition of the apple crop in Maine as of June 1 is 79% compared with 90% a year ago; in New Hampshire 92% compared with 86%; in Vermont 93% compared with 86%; in Massachusetts 93% compared with 78%; in Rhode Island 91% compared with 75%; and in Connecticut 89% compared with 75%. The average condition for all the New England states is 88.8% compared with 82.3% last year and 83.1% the ten year average.

The condition of peaches in New England on June 1 was 86.6% compared

LIKED PLUMP GIRLS

(By D. J. Walsh.)

LISA had always been thin, skinny. Her elbows stuck out and her collar bones humped up. Her mouth was a discouraged line in her too well set face. Lisa looked longingly at all well-rounded girls. "Why do I have to be such a rack-a-bone? If my face were full I'd be as good looking as Janet or Mary Lou." Lisa's five feet tipped the scales at exactly 100. Hopefully she drank milk, ate rich foods, took development exercises. The quivering needle perversely, persistently refused to advance one jot.

Then Lisa went away for a visit. She danced, and rode and swam and played. She was too busy to know whether she was rotund or willowy. Scales and all their kin passed temporarily out of her scheme of things. "Why, Lisa, how well you look!" The first person she met on her return greeted her in pleased surprise. "Child, you really got fat!" Her mother held her at arms length and looked her over.

"Mountain air, ur, agrees with you," remarked Lisa, coming over after dinner. "Want to go to the movies, Lisa? Some show tonight?" Lisa pricked up her ears and consulted her mirror.

"What are they all talking about?" she demanded of herself, peevishly disappointed. "I can't see that I look any different." She hopped on the scales on her way downtown.

One hundred five! "Whoa! I did it really, did!" Then down deep inside, "I'm going to have cushions on my elbows and curly lips I'm going to look like other folks."

And from then on the suddenly tractable little weight, obligingly slipped around. One hundred nine—thirteen—seventeen. Lisa let out the waistbands on two beloved old dresses.

"Lisa, child, you are getting fat," laughed Aunt Kate on her return from a trip east.

"I know, isn't it nice? I can wear low necks now and look right. How I did hate to be skiny!" And happy eyes laughed out at happy eyes from her mirror, assuring her that she was no longer in the depleted category.

"Hey, Lisa, you better go through that door sideways. First you know they'll be wanting you for the lady in the circus." Then small brother on the day the record went to one hundred twenty-two.

"I'm just right," retorted Lisa heatedly. "I'm only four pounds overweight now after all these years. I guess that's due me."

"You're getting pretty broad, dearie," apprised her mother considerably. "Your height—"

"Now mother, for pity's sake, let me enjoy it. Don't begin to pick on me before the novelty's worn off." She kissed the end of her mother's nose. "That would worry me thin again. Everybody loves a fat man," she laughed, picked up her hat and ran down the steps.

"I'm, Lisa," Uncle Jimmy drew his peddler's wagon up before the gate. "Don't you look like a heavy? You was lost there?" He reached a bag of apples down to her. "There ain't fattening? You can eat 'em," and sat chuckling.

"Pretty good armful." "Trying for the heavyweight class?" "Denial all how you're takin' on weight." "Soon be as stout as your ma." Friends and neighbors, with the easy familiarity of lifelong acquaintance, dropped their amused comments on half unheeding cars.

"I'm just nice and plump," Lisa congratulated herself happily, "and they think it's funny after all these lean years."

Then Lisa went to try on a new dress. Small mirror held close, she looked over her shoulder.

Her thoughts turned turtle. She shut her lips just in time on a sickening gasp. Surely that couldn't be her reflection. "Why, I'm fat! Fat!" she told herself in horrified consternation. "I didn't know I looked like that. I'm solid—pudgy. All thick around the waist!"

"Stout," "heavy," "broad," the hateful words climbed up out at her leaping memory and danced like lumps around her stricken head.

"I won't look that way. I won't!" she told herself all the way home and picked up an article on diet in the first magazine her hand touched when she got there.

"Lisa, are you dreaming?" At the table her mother stared at her. "You're eating your bread dry."

"I—I don't care for butter, thank you, mother."

Why should her wretched face flame at just that moment? They all looked.

"Not care for—"

"She's dieting!" whooped Jim, grinning like a gargyle. "She's dieting to reduce!"

What power of mendacity ever gave nine-year-old masculinity such a maddening faculty for locating the half's head?

"I'm a little upset today," she remarked evenly looking straight at her mother and ignoring the tormentor. "I thought I'd be a little careful with my eating. That's all."

"That doesn't explain the cucumber salad," put in her father quietly.

Lisa looked at it considerably—the usual generous plate of her favorite salad, more than half eaten, then met her father's amused eyes.

"It's a lovely day, isn't it?" she inquired gravely. "But I think it may rain before night."

Queer, now, when your mind starts along a certain line, so many things pop up that have a bearing on it. On her sister's library table that evening Lisa found a book on exercising.

"Go 'way, Beautiful!" She turned pages with one hand and fended off a clamorous youngster with the other. "Auntie Lee is busy. She'll read your book to you some other time." And carried her and home hidden under her sweater.

Thump—thump—softly rhythmic, the recurring beat disturbed the retreating family's peace.

"What is it," demanded her mother in exasperation. "Having gotten what she wanted she's evidently trying to forget it."

And it was even so.

Flat on her back, feet swinging up and down, up and down, Lisa counted, and trustfully imagined that her unshod heels falling on the soft rug could not be heard beyond her own door.

Faithfully, every day, morning and night, the performance was repeated. She stretched, she twisted, she rolled. She relinquished her share of her dearly loved fruit pies to a silenced Jim. She looked not upon buttery hot rolls, odoriferous gravies or juicy meats.

"Lucky I love 'em!" she comforted herself, and proceeded to live on salad.

"I wouldn't mind," she reflected in the midst of her nightly one-two-three-four, "if it weren't for the new clothes. All my fall outfit! I will have the slim, trim things I like to wear," and gave herself a week before either weighing or measuring.

"Three quarters of an inch!" she gasped and measured again. "I've gained—not lost!" She sat down limply in a chair.

"Well," she finally decided and stretched herself determinedly on the floor. "It must be because I have just started it. One-two-three-four, one-two—maybe I would gain a little at first—three-four. But I won't give up."

Poor old, quibbling Lisa—not a bit of pep. And she was beginning to be sensitive because there was nobody but Lisa.

"And he won't, either—if I'm fat," she muttered, and then settled herself triumphantly. She had lost an inch! What measure and three pounds!

Then Nancy Peters came to town.

He danced with Lisa, motored with Mary Lou, and then settled down regularly to Lisa.

"I'm going to buy a new corset," Lisa promised herself daintily when the third week showed no appreciable change, and did—$18 worth.

Heavy foot hit her to Mercer, forty miles away, to a dance that evening. There was a box of luscious fat chocolates in the car.

"What about I do?" An inward wall of anguish, covered by her most disarming smile. "I can't say I'm not feeling well. I wouldn't be going to the dance. I can't hurt his feelings by not eating them and I won't tell him I'm dieting to get thin." So she ate some and then some more—and felt her weeks of frantic effort slipping away from her with every delicious mouthful.

So she perforce fell to plots and scheming. Invited here and there, she evolved a system. If there were dishes served particularly lacking in nourishment, she tried to make most of her meal on those. If that failed her she ate so sparingly of a variety of things that she always remained a little hungry.

And it paid. She lost. Slowly, in fits and starts—but still she lost. Grimly she kicked, hopefully she twisted—and lost.

Then came the annual beach party and picnic at "Sun point, the Story's" dinner and the farewell banquet for the departing college crowd, all in one week.

She struggled, she wavered—and fell. That time the scales pointed uncompromisingly to 120. She fit her prettiest new white dress so well that she wouldn't wear it.

"Nancy!" she murmured. "It's as if I were a energetic. He'll be—fat!"

Yet that very evening, with a whiteness breze teasing the white roses back of them and the my stars peeping through all the keyholes of heaven Nancy asked her to marry him.

"You love me?" She stared at him unbelieving. Did nothing go straight in this ill-omened world? Confusion bred divulging frankness. "This way, Fat!"

Nancy laughed. It was a comforting, satisfied laugh.

"You're not fat. You're just an armful of sweetness." He showed her how that was. "Besides, my mother," he choked, and after a minute went on, his lips on her hair, "was plump just like you. I like it."

Lisa held a long breath. Then, "Oh Nancy," and slid weakly down and hid her face against his collar. "I don't have to kick any more!"

Fear Shortage of Youth

Great Britain faces a shortage of youth. It expects, as a result of the World war, that there will be a considerable decrease in the next few years of the proportion of boys and girls from fourteen to eighteen years of age in the general population. This will mean a decrease of nearly 400,000 in the number seeking juvenile employment. Authorities have recommended an investigation into ways to meet the situation.

Circulation of the Bible

Counting the distribution activities of all Bible societies, the circulation of the Scriptures is being increased by 30,000,000 copies yearly.

WHY

Collectors of Manuscripts Are Downcast

Today it is unfortunate that almost all manuscripts are typed. There are, however, rare exceptions. The late Joseph Conrad was one of the very few authors who worked almost entirely in longhand.

When I bought the manuscript of his book, "Victory," at the Quinn sale in New York in 1924, I paid the highest price—$8,100—ever given at auction for the manuscript of a living author. It was closely written on sheets that all two bulky cases.

The average writer nowadays, after he has corrected the final draft of his work, has it copied by a competent stenographer and then makes any further correction on it by his wishes. Many writers find it easier to create their stories directly upon the typewriter, while others dictate.

The typewriter—what a curse it has become to the collector! A century from now it will be almost impossible to find writers who stand the test of time.

Who knows but that the styles will have changed, and the machine upon which a masterpiece was brought to life will be considered even more precious!—Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach, in the Saturday Evening Post.

Why Altitude Affects

Water's Boiling Point

The so-called normal boiling point of water is 212 degrees Fahrenheit. That is the boiling point at sea level. But the boiling point of water is lowered about 1 degree Fahrenheit for every 550 feet of ascent above the sea level. Thus, in elevated positions, where the atmosphere is rare and the barometric pressure comparatively low, the boiling point may be much lower than at sea level. At the City of Mexico, 7,000 feet above the sea, water boils at 200 degrees Fahrenheit, and in certain places in the Himalayas at 150. Since the cooking of certain foods, as eggs, by boiling, requires a higher temperature, they cannot be boiled under such conditions. The summit of Pike's peak, more than 14,000 feet above the sea, is one such place where eggs can be fried or scrambled, but not boiled.

Why Wool Preserves Heat

It is the insulating quality of wool which makes it desirable as a protective covering, rather than any inherent power to generate heat. Wool fibers in themselves offer little resistance to heat transmission. The "kinks" or "waves" which are so distinctive a characteristic of wool give it its protective qualities. These waves or kinks, of which the fibers have from two to thirty to the inch, give something of the characteristics of a coiled spring, and when the fibers are woven together tend to create a resilient fabric with insuperable tiny air pockets. It is this finely divided and trapped air to which wool fibers owe their qualities of warmth.

Why Girls Are Disfigured

Each nation and each tribe has its own notion of what makes for the ideal of feminine beauty. Among the Baguau, a central African tribe, for instance, girls begin to prepare for marriage at the age of ten. This preparation consists of a lengthy and painful process of cutting marks in the chest and forehead. The wounds are made with large needles, ashes are then rubbed in, causing thick hard lumps to be raised. These markings the girls consider essential, while the men consider them as a sign of beauty in a wife. No man would think of marrying a girl who did not show these markings, and the girl is not admitted into the society of her elders until they are completed.

Why Leaves Stay Green

Evergreen leaves stay on all the winter because their sap becomes too thick to freeze, according to a new theory recently advanced by a botanist at the University of Idaho. In the summer the sap is thin and flows freely. A sudden severe frost in mid-summer could freeze the sap easily. But as autumn approaches, the starch in the leaves is converted into sugars and oil, changing the sap from a thin and watery fluid into a sort of sticky emulsion, very difficult to freeze. The greatest density of the sap is reached during the last few days of January.

Why Fumes Hurt Bindings

The gaseous products set about by the family furnace are likely to have a corrosive action on the book bindings in the family library. According to experiments conducted at the bureau of chemistry, the products of combustion which pollute the air in large cities have a very deteriorating effect on the leather of bindings. This may be counteracted by applying various dressings, either while the leather is being made or when the book is bound.

Why Called "Turnpikes"

The term "turnpike" as applied to a road does not refer to the kind of surface. A turnpike road may be paved or unpaved. "Turnpike" in this connection is only another name for tollgate or tollbar. A turnpike road was originally a toll road, a road which had turnpikes or tollgates to collect tolls from persons passing over the road. The term is now applied to roads which formerly collected tolls.

MORE OR LESS TRUE.

Not every painted face is a work of art—not by several million miles.

Even the man with an inferiority complex finds it hard to look up to people who look down on him.

Probably the greatest objection children find to loving their parents too devotedly is that it is apt to cramp their style.

An observing man is one who can tell his wife not only what another woman didn't have on but also what she did.

It's a safe bet that in the homes where they still get homemade bread another braids her hair at night and they ride in a silver, if at all.

Maybe there are not as many boys spoiled by indulgent parents as there are by neglectful ones, but they sure are a heap more badly spoiled.

The meanest man is the husband who is too disagreeable to live with and won't earn enough money to make it worth while suing him for alimony.

Knees probably haven't any false pride and they'd doubtless be willing to be kept warm in anything even as hideous as galoshes now used to protect the feet and ankles.

Often when a woman is listening to other women praising her husband her face says, "If her lips don't, ignorance is bliss and you are lucky not to be wise."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

AROUND THE CITY

If you would travel the road to glory, keep out of the ruts.

You never can tell. Many a man's trousers bag at the knees who never says his prayers.

A fool and his money are soon parted, but a fool and his folly are more closely welded.

Some people who extend the hand help the other one doubled up in case of emergency.

If thine enemy smite thee on one cheek does it suggest that one good turn deserves another?

The Bible tells us the earth was created for man, and the average fellow thinks he is the man.

Most of the discord in this vale of tears is coming from the people who are slinging their own praise.

Adam may have been more or less glib, but at any rate he didn't believe in hereditary influences.

Kindness is sometimes wasted. The only way you can make some people listen to reason is with a club.

GATHERED GEMS

Action is eloquence; the eyes of the ignorant are more learned than their ears.—Shakespeare.

Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one contemptible.—Addison.

Philosophy does not regard pedigree. She did not receive Plato as a noble, but made him so.—Seneca.

An ideal may seem unattainable but when it is distinctly acknowledged as the object of aspiration, it will be found close at hand.

There are worse things than superstition. To see gods everywhere is better than to see God nowhere.—Dr. Alexander McKenzie.

It is a shame for a man to desire honor only because of his noble progenitors, and not to deserve it by his own virtues.—Chrysostom.

Let patience bring forth her celestial fruits. Trust to God to weave your little thread into a web, though the pattern show it not.—George MacDonald.

BUNK DEFINED

What is bunk? Let the Forum's definition competitors answer:

Bunk is mental junk.

The three-ring circus stuff of intellectual Barnums.

Bunk—a mighty poor apology for a bed, or an equally bad substitute for a fact.

The limbo to which the average man consigns everything he doesn't understand.

Finally this from a feminine hand: Bunk is what is left of the world's wisdom and experience after youth has picked out the things it considers essential.

NORTH PARIS

Monday evening, June 11th, the young people of the United Parish Church of West Paris presented the three act comedy, "The Awakening of Maine," at Community Hall. Following is the cast of characters: Nahum Cole, a discouraged farmer, Arthur Dean Verity Cole, his wife, discontented, Lucy Barrows

Jane, their daughter, who returns from the University with ideas for improving the farm and life in general, Marjha Day

Judson, their son, also discontented, and yearns for larger spheres, Raymond Dean

Jerry, the hired man, who is really a U. of M. graduate with a desire for farm life, Edward Burnham

Widow Amarantha Boody, a neighbor who is thrifty, Lula Buck

S. L. Painter, a city shyster who tries to lure the farm away from the Coles, Charles Cushman

There were specialties between the acts. A sociable followed with ice cream on sale by the Community Club.

Tuesday evening the eighth grade held their graduation exercises, assisted by the other scholars at Community Hall.

The hall was very prettily decorated with wild flowers and blue and white streamers, which were the class colors. The back of the stage was banked with evergreen and purple lilacs. Over the stage was the class motto, "Row, Don't Drift." The diplomas were presented by Rev. James W. Barr, who also made a few remarks to the graduating class, and the lower grades, urging them to push ahead and improve all the opportunities given them to get a higher education.

Many from here attended the graduating exercises at West Paris Wednesday evening as three members of the class, Sidney Abbott, Madlyn Gibbs, and Leo Haata were from here, Uno Haata being valedictorian of the class. Thursday Misses Colby and Grandle with their scholars went by auto to Tripp Lake where they spent the day having their lunch out of doors.

Schools closed with a short session Friday morning for summer vacation. Miss Colby will spend a few days in Boston after which she has employment at Lakeside Inn, Norway. Miss Crandenire returned to her home in Vanceboro where she has employment in her father's sporting camp. They both expect to return for the next year.

MRS. FRANK KIMBALL

Through all the activities of commencement week there was a note of sadness cast by the death of Mrs. Frank Kimball, Sunday night, June 10th. Mrs. Kimball had been in poor health for the past year but none realized her serious condition until she suffered a shock about two weeks before her death from which she never rallied.

She was born in Sumner April 15, 1859, the daughter of Cyrus and Kate Hazleton, but spent most of her life in the town of Paris. She was educated in the Paris schools. About 18 years ago she married Frank Kimball. To them one daughter, Dora, was born.

The funeral services were held at the home Wednesday, June 13. Interment was at West Paris cemetery.

Beside her husband and daughter, Mrs. Kimball leaves to mourn her loss her father and mother, three sisters, Mrs. Herbert Kenney, South Paris, Mrs. Nathan Burgess, Sumner, and Mrs. Arthur Stevens, and six brothers, Thurlow, Levi, Lewis, Colby, Eugene and Hiram Hazleton, all of Paris.

Saturday evening, June 9th, Mrs. LeRoy Abbott entertained a party of young people of North and West Paris in honor of her son, Lee's, twenty-first birthday. The evening was spent in playing games. Mrs. Abbott served dainty refreshments. Lee received many presents.

Mr. and Mrs. H. D. McAllister and son, Howard, Mrs. Sadie Silver and daughter, Louise, and Ernest Noyes of South Paris attended the graduation exercises of the grammar school Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Griffin of Bethel were guests of her sister, Mrs. Martha Martin, Saturday evening.

Good Printing Pays

THE kind of printing that pays dividends is the kind you should have. Pale, muddy, poorly arranged printed matter is worse than none. The quality of your business is often judged by the quality of your stationery---inferior printing gives an impression of cheapness that is hard to overcome, while good printing carries with it a desirable suggestion of quality.

We can turn out anything in the printing line that you need, at a cost as low as anyone, quality, material and workmanship considered. Come in and see us before placing your order elsewhere.

Obey Life's Laws and Keep Spirit of Youth

There has been no improvement in the longevity of human life in the last one hundred years for those who reach the age of fifty, a writer in Physical Culture Magazine maintains. By improving the mortality record of the earlier years of life, he admits, the average span of life has nearly doubled in the last two or three centuries. But, he says, the chances for life for a man of middle age have not improved in the last century.

"The proper way to prolong life," he declares, "is to get more life, to live more completely, to make yourself more alive in every part of your bodily organism."

"There is much about the human body that is beyond our understanding. The most learned anatomical expert finds that the more he studies the body the more he realizes how numerous are the unsolvable mysteries that are hidden within it. Then why tamper with this marvellously constructed organism? Why not try to interpret the laws of life and health as indicated by the endeavors of the body itself to build and maintain health?"

"Then the spirit of youth can be retained on and on, at times even to old age; for life is worth little or nothing when the decrepitude of senility creeps upon you."

Old Year Dead When Harvest Is Gathered?

That the calendar by which we count our days does not fit in harmoniously with the seasons is pointed out by an editorial in Liberty Magazine.

"It has long been obvious," explains the editorial, "that starting the calendar on the first of January is all wrong. The year ends with the harvest, when the last grain is in, the leaves are fallen, and the earth has gone to sleep. The closing day of the calendar might well be that one on which we turn away from outward things and ask about the chances of having a little steam heat."

"It is unlikely on the whole, that the calendar makers will agree to end the year with the fall and begin it with the spring, as is most proper," concludes the editorial. "We must take January 1 as the beginning of the year because Julius Caesar fixed it that way and nobody has changed it."

Averages Untrustworthy

Recent insurance experience has shown that average tables are often misleading. The average weights are by no means the best weights. At ages under thirty the best conditions apparently exist among those whose weights are from five to ten pounds above the average. After age thirty the most favorable conditions are found among those whose weights are below the average. The amount below average increases with advancing age and at age fifty persons seem to be at their best when their weights are as much as twenty or thirty pounds below the average. Insurance experience shows that underweight is definitely an advantage so far as long life is concerned.

Her Past

They were very much in love with each other, and the young girl had but recently accepted an engagement ring from her sweetheart.

Although everything was perfectly planned for their future, the young man was inquisitive to the point of folly.

"Tell me, dear," he pleaded, "have you ever been kissed before?"

"The girl blushed. She did not know what to say for the best."

"Well, yes;—only twice," she confessed reluctantly.

"What?" he shrieked. "Who by?"

"Don't be ridiculous, dear," returned the girl. "It was only the church choir and the baseball club."

Trying to Help

Mrs. Black returned home one afternoon after consulting a physician with the announcement that she had been advised to reduce the amount of carbohydrates in her diet. A few hours later the family assembled for dinner prepared by the cook, when all at once Mrs. Black looked up to see Maude lifting some of the vegetables off the table.

"Why, Maude, what's the matter? Don't we get anything to eat?" some one asked the cook.

"No, ma'am, you don't get this. It's got too many carbohydrates in it," she answered quickly.

Safety Organization

The National Safety council is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization for the promotion of safety, sanitation and health in the industrial, public and home life of the whole world. It was founded in 1913, when a little group of employers, appalled by the useless and unnecessary sacrifice of life and limb occurring every year, determined upon a relentless fight against accident causes. Today the council has a membership of over 4,500 industrial concerns, government departments, insurance companies, schools, libraries, miscellaneous organizations and individuals. Its influence is felt throughout more than 10,000 workshops and among more than 10,000,000 workers, whose lives are safer because of its service. Its scope has grown from national to international.

Origin of Basket Ball

In 1891 a lecturer on psychology in the training school of the Young Men's Christian association at Springfield, Mass., speaking of the mental processes of invention, proposed the example of a game with its limitations and necessities. The same night James Naismith, a member of the class, worked out basket ball as an ideal game to meet the hypothetical case, and the next day in the lecture room it was put in practice with the aid of the members of the gymnastic class. Thence it spread to other branches of the Young Men's Christian association, and in two or three years to other athletic clubs and to the general public.

Fingerless Families

The story is that the great-great-grandmother, when she was young, told a lie about an apple, whereupon her parents threatened her with a curse that her children later on would be born with deformed hands. Whether it is true or not, the family of whom the story is told have for four generations suffered from a curious deformity. Ten members have had something wrong with their fingers, some having only two joints instead of three in some of the fingers, others having no finger-nails, and one or two being without fingers at all.—London Tit-Bits.

Her Point of View

John Bull, M. P., was determined to wake up his constituency. In particular he resolved to tackle a certain baronet's wife who, though she might have been a power for good in the district, preferred auction bridge to deeds of charity.

"Don't fret, Lady Blankspice," he said, when he called upon her one afternoon, "you have noticed the time that is wasted at bridge parties."

Lady Blankspice agreed heartily. "You're right," she said. "Some people take years to shuffle and deal, don't they?"—London Mail.

One Is About Gone

The father, most closely related to the marten, is exclusively American, inhabiting a rather narrow range from Nova Scotia to northwestern British Columbia, and in the Alleghenies, Rocky mountains and Sierras Cascade ranges. It was never a common species, says Nature Magazine, and the effect of settlement and unrestricted trapping has been its virtual extinction over most of its range; yet it still has little protection, and the high price that the skin commands insures its continued pursuit.

Frugality

An boy should be educated with temperance, so the first greatest lesson that should be taught them is to acquire frugality. It is by the exercise of this virtue alone that they can ever expect to be useful members of society. It is true, lectures continually repeated upon this subject may make some boys, when they grow up, run into an extreme, and become misers; but it were well had we more misers than we have amongst us.—Goldsmith.

What's the Use?

The American book canvasser tackled a solemn-looking negro elevator man.

After listening imperturbably while the canvasser enlarged on the vast stores of knowledge to be derived from the work he was offering on the installment plan, the negro remarked quietly: "Tain't be no use to me, how. I know beeps more now than I gets paid for."—Exchange.

Laments Passing of the "Good Old Times"

Times have changed and people have grown so serious that the old delight in holidays has vanished, is the complaint voiced by the writer of an editorial in Liberty Magazine.

"April Fools' day was one of the bright spots of the year," points out the editorial. "There was a brick under the hat; the stuffed pocketbook with the string tied to it. Breakfast muffins filled with cotton were a rare treat, and so was candy shot through with cayenne pepper. It was a long time anticipated and long remembered, as were St. Valentine's day, Christmas eve, Halloween, and the night before the Fourth of July. On Thanksgiving we went to grandmother's house and ate gorgeously. There aren't such grandmothers any more, or such cranberries."

"Christmas now means bills to meet," continues the disillusioned writer. "Independence day has been made a Sane Fourth. We no longer get any fun out of April Fools' day. These unofficial childish holidays were a kind of possession peculiar to the past. They are not the same now. We are grown up and serious, and times have changed."

DESTROYING THE SMOKE EVIL

An "all gas" apartment house, possibly the first in the United States, has been erected at Bayonne, New Jersey. All cooking and heating, including the hot water supply, is furnished entirely by gas-burning equipment. It is believed that this innovation, if successful, will do away with much of the smoke in the New York area, now being caused by coal-burning apartment houses as well as industrial plants.

Without considering any other elements, this is a splendid example of the progress of the gas industry. But a few years ago gas was used sparingly and for few purposes. Today it has proven itself invaluable to industry, and can be the complete cooking and heating agency of an ultra-modern and efficient apartment.

The growth of gas usage has been steady but quiet, and it is doubtful if the general public as yet recognizes what has been accomplished. A praiseworthy movement is now on foot by the leading gas companies of the New England States, which are co-operating to send out a series of messages telling the story of gas and forecasting the future. It is a romantic story and one of absorbing interest. A great deal of the world's industrial history has been made since William Murdoch a little over a century ago first used gas to light his office, to the present when gas is inseparable from industry and home life as well.

MARY AND HER PAL

(By D. J. Walsh.)

MARY HOLLIS settled herself in her chair and wiped her spectacles for the sake of clearer vision. She had removed her hat and her gray hair lay close about her thin, plain, gentle face. Having cleaned her spectacles she put them on and rummaged in her bag for her crocheting work. Nothing like crocheting work to steady her nerves after what had happened.

Mary sighed as she picked out the clover-leaf pattern. She had intended to give the completed strip of edging to Genevieve, but, land sakes, Genevieve didn't wear garments that took kindly to homemade trimming. Silk all the way through, that was Genevieve's slogan. It had made a big, though not the biggest, difference between her and her mother-in-law.

Four whole days must elapse before she reached home—the home. Four lonely unaccompanied days with memory nagging at her. And something worse than memory—the thing that Doctor McAttee had told her before she went out West.

Somebody had paused beside her. She lifted her eyes from her work and the man smiled down at her. He was young, big, full of vigor. Brown of skin with gray eyes that looked deep into one's consciousness.

"All alone?" he asked, Mary nodded. "So am I. And there isn't a soul on this train that wants to pal with me."

"That's queer," Mary said. "But I guess you won't find anything very entertaining about an old woman like me."

"Come out on the observation platform," he said. "There's no one out there now and we can have a good talk."

Mary went, crocheting work in hand. It was pleasant in the open air. Thanks to Genevieve she was traveling de luxe. But then, she sighed again. Genevieve would have done anything to get rid of her. This man—she turned her attention to him. His voice had a pleasant sound. At first she was more interested in his tone than in what he was saying.

They went in to lunch together. Mary had no reservation; he had. He commanded courtesy without appearing to do so. They dined—Smithed it—she had learned that word recently. She paid for her own toast, tea and egg. It tasted better because he sat opposite.

Next morning they breakfasted together. Afterward when the train stopped he made her go out with him on the platform for a marathon. She clung to his arm and tried to step out the way he did. The color came to her face.

After lunch when he had gone into the smoker for a pipeful of tobacco the older of two youngish women who had been watching Mary and her pick-up approached her.

"I am Miss Bell," said the woman. "I advise you to look out for that bouncer. He's the sort that preys on unsuspecting old ladies."

Mary scratched her nose with the crocheting hook and looked at Miss Bell. "Guess you're mistaken," she said quietly. "It's none of your business anyway."

Miss Bell flushed angrily. "I hate to see you bamboozled," she said. "He tried to scrap acquaintance with me and my sister and we froze him. So did everybody else he spoke to. The ideal breezing through a car that way and talking boldly to folks. You're the only person who fell for him."

Mary studied the clover leaf so intently that the woman was obliged to withdraw.

"Good land!" she thought. "I must look like I had valuables about me somewhere. But I wasn't going to tell her that I've got only nineteen dollars besides my ticket." She smiled really amused.

He came back with a box of candy. Such a pretty box, all done up in shiny stuff. She hated to open it as he requested.

"It's good for you," he said. "Nibble away." Then he bent close. "Anybody warned you against me yet?" he asked, with a vibration of laughter in his deep voice. Mary looked embarrassed. "Oh, I see what's going on. And I enjoy it. Once in a while I do run up against a bunch like yours on this train. Lucky to find a sensible body like you, Pal."

There was something stimulating in his presence. Mary didn't care who or what he was; she liked him. His name was unknown to her; she had not told him her name. But names didn't matter. You didn't pick a flower for the name. That was one of the many things he said which she felt she must treasure in her heart as long as she lived.

The third day she said suddenly: "Theron wasn't a particle like you." "Wasn't he?" returned Pal. "Maybe he was a good deal better than me." He spoke as if he knew all about Theron.

She went on to tell him about Theron, her only child. He wouldn't look at one of the home-town girls, but when Genevieve came to visit her aunt nothing would do but he must marry her. He had thrown up every thing and followed her back to her home. Mary never saw him again; she had heard from him. He had taken just about all the money they had had to set up in business. But the business failed. And he died. Mary's heart had sort of failed and the neighbors told her she better get into the home while she could. Then, after a visit to Doctor McAttee's, she'd got it in her head that she must see the little boy Theron left. The little boy must be like his daddy—but he wasn't. The trip had been disappointing. Take it all in all, she was better off at the home.

Mary wasn't conscious that she was telling all this. But Pal had a way of bringing her out. When she looked into his gray eyes she wished she had somebody like him that she could call her own.

That night there was a crash and shock. Mary was thrown from her berth into the aisle. Others were thrown from their berths into the aisle. There was a terrible clamor. The coach turned over on its side.

Somebody lifted her in powerful arms. Pal.

"Don't bother about me," she said, realizing what had happened. "Do something for the others. I've not got long to live anyway."

"There's work here for you to do," he said sternly. "Come and help me. You're the only person I can rely upon."

Side by side they ministered to the injured. Mary had been a nurse before her health failed and her skill was of value now. She bound wounds deftly, comforted hysterical women, soothed frightened children.

And forgot herself, almost forgot the splendid man who directed her movements with curt insistence upon the right thing.

Dawn found them once more speeding eastward. The wreck hadn't been so bad after all and Mary despite a few bruises and a strained arm found that she wanted her breakfast. He ordered for her and declared he should pay the bill.

"You did about $75 worth of work for me last night," he said. There was a purple bruise across his forehead, but under it the gray eyes were full of light.

"I was glad to be of some use again in this world," Mary said.

"You must have been a pretty efficient nurse?"

"I was. But of course now the way my heart is—" she paused. "You see they give me only a few months to live," she said quietly.

He leaned across the table and took her wrist in his strong fingers. He smiled.

"I give you fifteen years at least," he said. "Fifteen years of active service. Leave your apartment in the home and get back to work. Earn your $50 a week. Do good to others and enjoy life." Suddenly he drew a tablet of paper from his pocket and scribbled upon it with his fountain pen. "Here, take this," he said. "It will help you some."

Mary glanced at the words. It was a recommendation that would take her anywhere. And the name signed was one whose fame even she recognized, that of a great specialist in heart diseases.

Pal, indeed!

Wonder Credited to East Indian Magician

Jean Baptiste Tavernier, Seventeenth century French traveler and writer, describes in one of his writings the manner in which a magician of India caused a stick to grow into a fruit-bearing tree before his eyes. The passage follows:

"At Barache there is a first-class English house, which I reached on a certain day with the English president, on my way from Agra to Surat. There came also certain jugglers, asking leave to exhibit some of their professional skill, and the president was curious to see it. In the first place they lighted a great fire, at which they heated their bodies, then wound them about their bodies and pretended that they were suffering in consequence, but no harm followed. They next took a morsel of wood, set it in the ground and asked one of the spectators to choose what fruit he liked. His choice fell upon mangoes, and thereupon one of the performers put a shroud about him and squatted on the ground five or six times. I had the curiosity to ascend to an upper room, where I could see through a fold in the sheet what was being done by the man. He was actually cutting the flesh under the arm-pits with a razor, and rubbing the wood with his blood. Each time he rose up the wood grew visibly; on the third occasion there were branches and buds thereon, on the fourth the tree was covered with leaves, and on the fifth it was bearing flowers."—Detroit News.

"Coveting" and "Stealing"

Coveting means to desire the possession of something that is forbidden. Stealing is taking unlawful and secret possession of what belongs to another. Thieves often steal what they covet. Coveting is not illegal in the eyes of the law; it is merely morally wrong, because the person who covets does not actually commit a wrongful act in merely hankering unduly for what belongs to another.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Uncover Old-Time Coins

Several gold and silver coins dating back to the time of Roman glory in Africa have been discovered by excavators near a little river at the very gates of Meknes, Morocco. The money was contained in three earthen urns. One of these urns, still in a good state of preservation, bears a Latin inscription, which adds to the value of the vessels and currency from an archaeological standpoint.

SERVICE

Mail Order House

Automobiles, radio sets, tires, pianos and other similar things require service—not only at the time you buy them, but more or less throughout their lives.

There are, of course, other things you buy where service is not a factor. But why send away for tires? The post office will not demount your old tire, mount the new one, inflate it to the correct pressure, examine your wheels for alignment, keep your rims free from rust and then at regular intervals inspect your tires for tread cuts and minor injuries. They don't keep free air and water on tap and maintain road service.

We do all these things.

Moreover, we'll sell you a Goodyear Pathfinder tire—a quality product of the world's largest tire factory and and at a price as low as that charged by the mail order house.

Remember—no delay—no postage or express—no hand labor on your part and you see what you're getting before you buy.

We are here—at your call, every day in the year—for Service.

SAFETY PAYS DIVIDENDS

"Ninety-eight per cent of all industrial accidents are preventable by means now known to industry," said a supervising engineer of the Massachusetts Safety Council. He urged that it is sound business for both employer and employee to see that these mishaps are prevented.

Nine tenths of this improvement in industrial safety can be made by the exercise of proper supervision between the employer and the employee, and the remaining tenth by the use of better physical equipment and plant conditions.

"The remedy proposed is not beyond attainment," he continued, "because numerous plants by using safety systems have found it possible to reduce materially their accident experience. Not only is a safety program a humane undertaking for manufacturers, but it pays."

The wearing of goggles when exposed to eye hazards would eliminate nearly 50 per cent of the cases of mishaps, and appreciation by the worker of the fact that his hands are his stock in trade and deserve watching, would eliminate another large percentage, he said.

A STRIKING ILLUSTRATION

When one listens to the pleas of our scientific friends urging that the state government go into some line of industry, like operating electric, telephone, insurance or other enterprises, one cannot help but stop and think about Moore's Shells.

How far would the nation have progressed industrially, if power development had been tied up by political wrangles such as have controlled Moore's Shells since the war ended? What a calamity it would be to have our means of communication, transportation and power distribution at the mercy of such political managers.

This illustration alone should be sufficient to convince all persons that the old American Doctrine of encouraging private initiative and enterprise in all branches of industry, is far superior to the broken-down European practice of injecting the government into the private affairs of people and business in ways which are entirely outside the legitimate functions of government.

A few months ago millions were made in the stock market, but recently many of those millions have been lost. To own, however, certain Stocks or Bonds, is an almost sure guarantee of a stable income; while certain others are purely speculative and uncertain.

To invest more dollars in such a way that safety and adequate returns are assured may require a business knowledge that few of us possess; and to invest life in the markets of the world, is a venture from which most of us are poorly prepared.

But to form a proper estimate of what our life is really worth, may save us from disastrous results.

The subject that we shall consider next Sunday morning will be, "The Investment of Life."

The Ladies' Club will meet with Miss Foster on Thursday afternoon.

TO REVIVE FAMOUS DRAMA AT LAKEWOOD NEXT WEEK

Arthur Byron to Star in "The Lion and the Mouse"

A revival of "The Lion and the Mouse" with Arthur Byron in his original role is being superintended at the attraction at Lakewood next week. From available theatrical records this famed drama has not been seen in this state since Mr. Byron and Margaret Ellington co-starred in it several years ago, when, following a run of four months at the Park Theatre, Boston, they made a short tour of Maine, the itinerary including Portland, Lewiston and Bangor. It was through his perfect performance in this play that Mr. Byron achieved distinction as a foremost among our American actors.

"The Lion and the Mouse," which was the "Albie's Irish Rose" of its day, has for as long run records as remembered, was written by Charles Klein, whose notable contributions to the American drama include "The Motor Master" and "The Third Degree." Mr. Byron has played the lead role for over six hundred performances, and for the past three weeks he has been devoting much time to preparing the Lakewood Players for this extraordinary production. The cast has been carefully selected and rehearsed, and the stage settings are perfect replicas of the original mountings.

Mr. Byron will have a notable supporting company including his wife, Kathryn Keyes, and his two daughters, Kate and Helen. "The Lion and the Mouse" is the outstanding production of the summer season at Lakewood, and record attendance is anticipated, based upon an unusually large advance sale of tickets.

The road boys and boys leads to the house never—German proverb.

Tides of Puget Sound

Enormous in Volume

Puget sound, the many-branched inlet of the Pacific ocean, is one of the most picturesque bodies of water in this country. Its shores, once densely wooded, have been denuded for the most part by the lumberman's ax, but the neighboring mountains offset this loss and afford a wonderful background to the scene. Although the natural beauties are many, the treacherous waters of the Narrows, a contracted part of the sound which opens farther south into quiet bays and the ports of Olympia and Shelton, are feared by all who are acquainted with that locality. The tides are extreme and their ebb and flow causes a rush of water through the Narrows. Twenty-five or thirty miles above the Narrows, in the upper reaches of the sound, the tides attain a height of twenty feet or more. Viewed from the shore, which is generally precipitous, the surging of the water as the tide sets in is magnificent, but this is the scene of many tragedies which occur each year. Tremendous whirlpools are formed in the slender passage and rarely have rowboats and such small craft escaped when gripped in the swirling water. Even large steamboats creak and groan under the strain of breasting these twisting currents. The roar of the tides when running at full resembles the distant boom of the surf.

Standard of English

Speech Not Possible

A recognized authority on English words and speech recently said: "Not long ago a conference was held in London for the purpose of arriving at a universal standard for English speech. At one time I believed that it was impossible."

Later, the subject was brought to my attention by prominent educators. Under the stress of arguments presented to me I weakened in my judgment, and was willing to go on record as saying that it might be possible to standardize English speech, but after two years of close study of the whole subject I feel that my first judgment was right.

"It is as impossible to standardize the sounds in American and English speech with the hope of having the standardization accepted throughout the English-speaking world as it is to stem the tide of the sea."

Successful Only in West

The English walnut originated in southwestern Asia and has been under important cultivation in the United States since 1890. It is successful only in the far western states, mainly in California, Oregon and southwestern Washington. The principal center is around Los Angeles in southern California. Planting is constantly being increased in central California, northwestern Oregon and contiguous territory north of Portland. It should be grown under 2,000 feet of altitude. The climate requirements are moderate but uniform temperatures, considerable moisture, and freedom from radical drops in temperature.

Youthful Diagnostician

Helen Jeanne, the two-year-old daughter of a physician, deemed herself an efficient authority on medicine. One afternoon she sat in her rocking chair, crooning to her curly, blond-headed baby doll. Finally a disgusted look clouded her face. She exclaimed, "My baby doesn't give me any patience 'a tall,' and rocked more furiously than ever.

After a minute or two, Helen Jeanne placed her soft, baby hand on her doll's forehead and, after a moment of reflection, shouted: "My-ver-l Baby has awful temp'ture."

Hawk Farmer's Friend

Biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture points out that some hawks are highly beneficial to the farmer, preying at most entirely upon small mammals, such as mice, ground squirrels and rabbits. Food of other hawks consists chiefly of birds. The bird eaters should be killed at every opportunity, but it is equally important that the others be spared, for they destroy many small animal pests of the farmer. The bird-eating hawks include the Cooper hawk, and the sharp-shinned hawk.

No. Your daughter asked for a half-pound of grated cheese and a half-pound of soap flakes. This is the cheese.
"My stars! And last night I made a pudding!"—Progressive Grocer.

Sounded the Same

"I've broken my favorite jazz record right in two," said the dapper musician. "Guess I can fix it, though." Then she carefully glued the two parts together, putting the glue on the back side, the side that she didn't care for. Then she played it—and found she had glued a back side and a front side together. "What shall I do?" she exclaimed.

"Never mind," said the cynical parent. "It sounds just about the same as if you had glued it right."—Springfield Union.
